THE

SUMMER EXCURSIONIST

"I have gathered a posy of other men's flowers, and nothing but the thread that binds them is mine own."

THERE is a best way to travel, as there is a best way to live; and to know how to do either, one must have experience, or hints from the experienced. A bright day in the middle of May and a little leisure, suggested a short railway trip, and a friend whispered in my ear, "Take your outing over the Central Vermont Railway, and you will not regret your choice; as you will not suffer from excessive heat nor a dusty road, and finer bits of scenery cannot be seen from any road in the country, than are visible along the route of the old reliable Central."

Before I returned home I knew why my friend called it the "old reliable Central," and I echoed his sentiments concerning the scenery; for it must be a dullard, indeed, who could not enjoy such a trip. A ride over this magnificent road, perfectly ballasted, supplied with the best steel rails, its bridges of stone or iron, and the cars fitted with the Miller platform coupler and buffer, automatic brakes, and every imaginable appliance to promote the comfort and safety of the public, is a desideratum, and not an experience to be dreaded.

CENTRAL VERMONT

A HINT TO TOURISTS.

If you are hesitating as to which route you will take for a summer's jaunt or for a fishing excursion, or if business calls you north, and you are in doubt which way to go, let me give you a hint; let me tell you about a few of the towns and cities you will pass through; let me just give you a mere suggestion of the beautiful scenery which meets the eye on every hand, and a word about the comforts of the journey, and the courtesies you are certain to enjoy from the employés of this model road, the aim of whose managers has always been to promote the comfort and happiness of its patrons.

THE "PURITAN" AND "PILGRIM."

Going north in the morning, you will take the nine o'clock train at the Boston and Lowell passenger station, and in the evening you will take a Pullman "Sleeper" at seven o'clock. These "Sleepers" are the finest and most luxurious cars ever built by the Pullman Company. They were built expressly for the Central Vermont, and those who have wooed the drowsy god in the ordinary sleepers, will appreciate the force of the comparison when I tell them that the "Pilgrim" and "Puritan" are as much finer, as much more luxurious and comfortable than the ordinary "Pullman," as that is better than a second-class day car. The ventilation is perfect, the cars are cool in summer and warm in winter, and the construction of the running-gear has been such that the motion and jolting incident to rapid running are reduced to the minimum.

THE DAY TRIP.

Leaving Boston at 9 A. M., we glide (I use that word, for the motion is scarcely perceptible) past the few suburban towns intervening between Boston and Winchester, and halt here for a few moments. Our next halting-place is

Lowell, where baggage is taken on and put off, and we have time to make a few inquiries concerning the "city of spindles" and the home of

CENTRAL VERMONT

R.R.

Gen. Butler. In 1880, Lowell had a population of 59,475 — a gain over the previous ten years of 18,547. It is the leading cotton-manufacturing city in the United States, and is also a railway junction, six roads centering here. The territory of the city embraces 2,587 acres. The first cotton-mill was erected here in 1820. To-day there are eighty mills, in which is invested over twenty million of capital. In 1875, Lowell boasted of 678,521 spindles and 15,189 looms, from which were made 2,660,000 yards of cotton-cloth, 60,000 yards of woolen-cloth, 40,000 yards of carpeting, 3,000 shawls, and 17,000 pairs of hose every week, giving employment to about 18,000 men, women, and children. The Lowell Machine Shops also give employment to about 1,500 hands. The city has 13 banks, 4 daily and 4 weekly papers, 2 hospitals, 26 churches, 2 public libraries.

Along the Merrimack.—Leaving Lowell, we ride for forty or fifty miles along the bank of the Merrimack, which, rising in the town of Franklin, N. H., from the Pemigewasset and the Winnipiseogee, flows peacefully on until lost in the Atlantic. The ride along the river is particularly enjoyable. Here one could toss a stone into the water, then by a sudden turn in the stream or road we lose sight of it for a minute, and soon we catch the glow of its ripples, sparkling in the sunlight across the mile of fertile meadow-land, the high, yellow, sandy banks furnishing a frame of old gold for the dark, sparkling river, which flows peacefully on to its destination, save where here and there protruding rocks disturb the even tenor of its way. But our meditations are cut short by a brief halt at Nashua, which is the junction of six railways, viz.: The Boston, Lowell and Nashua; Wilton; Worcester and Nashua; Nashua and Rochester; Concord; and the Nashua, Acton and Boston. This little city is not, like Lowell, Lawrence, and Manchester, distinguished as a manufacturing center, although it boasts of a number of very successful business enterprises. It is a pretty place, has an area of 18,898 acres, and in 1880 had a population of 15,397. The Merrimack enters the city from the east, and the Nashua River from the west; it has also the Salmon Brook on the south, and the North Pennichuck Brook on the north, and all these streams are utilized for manufacturing purposes.

CENTRAL VERMONT

R.R.

Manchester, fifty-nine miles from Boston, is our next stopping-place, and as the train runs into the commodious station, one is impressed with the activity and bustle of the city, which in 1880 boasted a population of 32,630. From the windows of the car, as we hurry along toward the north, we catch glimpses of the large manufactories—the Amoskeag, the Stark, the Manchester, and the Langdon mills. There are also several minor manufactories here, and the noted Manchester Locomotive Works. Millions of dollars are invested in these establishments, which give employment to thousands of men, women, and children. The city has 2 daily and 4 weekly newspapers, 16 churches, 8 hotels, and a system of water-works which cost $800,000.

Concord. Eighteen miles north of Manchester, and seventy-three miles from Boston, lies the capital city of the old Granite State, which in 1880 had a population of 13,838. It is one of the most interesting inland cities of New England. Its topography presents a wonderful variety, consisting of hills and wide-spreading intervalles, winding rivers, swift rapids, and calmly nestling lakes. Through the center of the city, from the north, flows the tortuous Merrimack, and the Contoocook enters from the north-west corner. The hills of Concord would in many States be designated as mountains, for one—the “Rattlesnake”—rises from near the center of the city to a height of 500 feet above the river. The city contains the State House, State Prison, Insane Asylum, the County Jail, White’s Opera House, eleven churches, three newspapers, four hotels, seven banks, and several manufacturing establishments, although the city is better known for wealth and politics than on account of its manufactures. Concord is also a railway center of no mean proportions. It is the starting-point of the Concord road, 141 miles in length; the Boston, Concord and Montreal, 163 miles; the Northern, 82 miles; and the Concord and Claremont, 88 miles. Here trains are made up for the White Mountains, for the Passumpsic, for Bristol, for White River Junction, for Claremont, Hillsborough, Lawrence, Lowell, Portsmouth.

From Concord to White River Junction the ride is full of interest, aside from the pleasures of the landscape. Seven miles from Concord we pass the little village of Fisherville, and here we are reminded of

CENTRAL VERMONT R.R.

Hannah Duston, a brave woman, whose courage and endurance are told to the world in a monument which was erected to her memory, a few years ago, by the New Hampshire Historical Society. Hannah Duston lived in Haverhill, Mass. She was the mother of thirteen children, the youngest a babe of a few months, when on the 15th day of May, 1698, the Indians descended on the settlement, and after slaughtering many of the inhabitants, carried Hannah, her child and nurse, off as prisoners. The child was killed, and the two women were taken to an island in the Merrimack, near the mouth of the Contoocook, now known as Duston's Island. She was held a prisoner there in a company of twelve savages. One night, with the aid of her nurse and a white boy, this brave and determined woman killed all the Indians in their sleep, except one squaw, took their scalps, and after a journey fraught with peril, hunger, and hardship, the trio found their way back through the wilderness to Haverhill.

The Home of Webster.—The place where the great "expounder" passed so many happy hours in his youth and manhood was pointed out to us as we hurried through Webster Place, a small village. The large white house not far from the railway track was where he lived for a good many years, and his birthplace is not far distant, in the town of Salisbury, which, when Webster was born, was a part of the town of Franklin, and both towns claim the honor of giving to the world the great statesman. We halt for a few moments at Franklin, a pretty place, situated on both sides of the Merrimack; and here we bid adieu to the stream which we have traced from Lowell, 66 miles, to its fountain-head. A little way beyond Franklin we skirt the shore of the pretty lake named after Webster, where he was accustomed to enjoy his favorite pastime—fishing. At Franklin the Bristol Branch Railway diverges from the main line, and runs to Bristol, 13 miles.

Potter Place, a station about two miles north of Franklin, is our next halting-place, and here we remain long enough to get a good view of Mount Kearsage, a noted summer resort. Stages from the Winslow House, four miles distant, connect with the cars. This house was named in honor of John A. Winslow, who commanded the "Kearsage," which sank the "Alabama," in 1864, off Cherbourg. Just beside the railway track is an old one-story and a-half house, deserted and weather-beaten, and to the north, a few yards from the house, stands a gnarled, stunted old apple-tree, which shelters two graves beneath its overhanging branches. Here lie the dust of a colored man and his wife, named Potter, who for many years lived in the now deserted cottage. Potter was a famous character, and middle-aged men will tell you how they used, when boys, to witness his feats of jugglery with opened-mouth wonder. He was, in his day, one of the best "magicians" in New England. Two old gray stone slabs mark the resting-place of the dead.

The Enfield Shakers.—It is after twelve o'clock, and a ride of one hundred miles has aroused within us thoughts of dinner, which, we are assured, awaits us at White River Junction, about fifty miles distant. We rush along, passing Canaan, Enfield, Lebanon, and West Lebanon. Enfield calls for rather more than a passing glance, for it is situated in the midst of scenery of surpassing loveliness, and is the home of a peculiar people. The Enfield Shakers have a wide reputation. Shaker flannels, garden-seeds, apple-sauce, pails, brooms, etc., are familiar to nearly every New England boy and girl. Just north of this prosy, industrious village, where poetry seems to have been forgotten by this matter-of-fact people, we suddenly come upon the loveliest little lake imaginable, and skirt its shores for miles. Framed in a cluster of sheltering hills, it ripples and dances to the music of the breeze, and, as it glistens and smiles beneath the sun, it sorely tempts the lover of nature to quit the busy, bustling, selfish world, and, like Thoreau upon the shores of Walden, commune with the Unseen, and dream his life away. But steam and time will not pause for us to grow sentimental, and we rush along past Lebanon and West Lebanon toward the Junction. The large building on the hill overlooking West Lebanon, is the Tilden Seminary for young ladies. We cross the Connecticut over an immensely high bridge, and are at White River Junction. "Twenty minutes for refreshments!" is welcomed by the hungry passengers, some of whom leave us at this point, and after lunch at the excellent restaurant, take trains for Springfield, Newport, Vt., Bellows Falls, and other points along the connecting lines of road.

CENTRAL VERMONT R.R.

THE OLD RELIABLE CENTRAL.

We have been riding thus far since leaving Boston over the Boston, Lowell & Nashua, the Concord, and the Northern Railways. At White River Junction we begin our ride over the Central Vermont proper, which was opened to Montpelier in 1849, and to Burlington in 1850. In 1852 the route was extended to Montreal, via Rouse's Point, and in 1862 the present route, to Montreal and St. Johns, was opened.

After leaving White River Junction we ride along the bank of the White River, the clearness and purity of whose waters are quite remarkable. The scenery along this route from White River Junction to St. Albans is of the most delightful character. The White River and Winooski Valleys present to the eye of the tourist pictures of the rarest loveliness. The deep, fertile valleys, the gently sloping uplands, the verdant hillsides, the cloud-capped summits of the grand old rock-bound hills, combine to furnish scenery unsurpassed in this country in peaceful beauty and grandeur. I know of no railway route where more beautiful, impressive, and charming scenery can be found than over the Central Vermont and its numerous branches. Fresh surprises greet the traveler on every hand, until, at the end of a day's journey, one retraces his way over the mountains, through the valleys, over the rushing torrents, past the peaceful, prosperous farms, where contentment reigns supreme, along the fertile meadows, beside the loveliest of lakes, through prosperous villages and rocky gorges, and the mind is lost in wonder that the skill of man should have placed it in one's power to witness such magnificent panoramas with ease and comfort.

As we speed along we pass hurriedly through the pretty, prosperous villages of Hartford, West Hartford, Sharon, and South Royalton. This, we are told, was the native place of Joseph Smith, the founder of the Mormon faith. The town was plundered by the Indians in 1790, on the same day with the Royalton Massacre. Leaving Sharon, we pass through South Royalton, Royalton, Bethel, Randolph, Braintree, and Roxbury. Here we cross the summit pass of the Green Mountains, at an elevation of one thousand feet above the sea, and leaving the headwaters of the White River, whose company we have enjoyed for about fifty miles,

WHITE RIVER, BELOW SHARON.

we strike the source of Dog River, a tributary of Lake Champlain. Just west of the station we cross a bridge seventy feet above the stream which flows beneath, and begin our descent toward Lake Champlain. Seven miles from Roxbury we come upon Northfield, where formerly were located the shops of the Central, which several years ago were removed to St. Albans. At Northfield is located the Lewis College, formerly the Vermont Military Institute. Ten miles beyond Northfield we arrive at Montpelier, the capital of the State, or rather, we should say, Montpelier Junction, for a short spur track runs down from the village. Montpelier is one of the most beautiful towns in New England. It is nestled beneath high, verdant hills, which stand guard over a refined, cultured, and wealthy community — a community where law and order, peace and prosperity, education and refinement, have ever held sway. The population of the town is about four thousand. It is, as everybody knows, the capital of the State, and until the erection of the new State House at Albany, N. Y., only one other State, Ohio, boasted of so fine a State House as did Vermont. Few towns in New England can offer so many attractions to the denizen of the city who wishes to secure a quiet, restful, beautiful spot in which to pass his vacation. Its hotels are unrivaled, its drives are delightful, its scenery entrancing, its people hospitable. It is one of the few places in the country where one can escape from the horrible "hay fever" with which so many are annually afflicted.

The Winooski Valley, into which the traveler is ushered as he enters Montpelier, is remarkable for its fertility and beauty. The broad, rich meadows, the gradually rising uplands, the verdant hills, form a picture rare as the sun is seeking his rest, and casting his shadows aslant the lovely landscape.

Mount Mansfield. Eight miles from Montpelier we halt at Waterbury, pleasantly situated on a pretty plateau. Camel's Hump looks over the intervening ridges as we near the station, and assumes an almost human expression, having the outline of a forehead and nose. The Waterbury Hotel is near the station, and has ample accommodation for a large number of guests. Waterbury is so attractive in its situation and surroundings, that many summer tourists make it their headquarters. Mount Mansfield and

A GLIMPSE OF CAMEL'S HUMP.

CENTRAL VERMONT R.R.

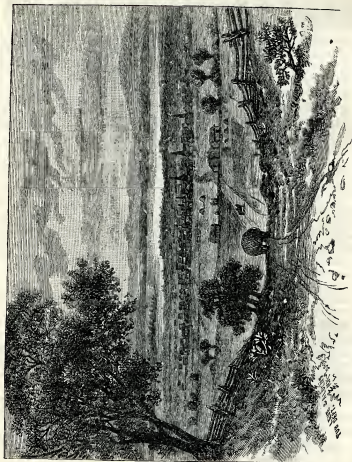

Camel's Hump, the highest of the Green Mountain peaks, are within easy riding distance, and the whole vicinity is rich with the characteristic scenery of Vermont. Mount Mansfield (5,000 feet high) is the principal attraction of this region, and is most conveniently reached from Stowe, ten miles north of Waterbury. It is almost superfluous to say that the drive to Stowe is one of great beauty, through the hills and valleys of this enchanting region. Stowe is eight miles from the summit of Mount Mansfield, which lifts its noble outline in full view of the Mansfield House. This house was opened to the public in 1885, and sustains an excellent reputation. It can accommodate over 300 guests, and, being the central point of a most romantic and beautiful region, is a great favorite with summer visitors. Mount Mansfield is reached by stages, which leave the hotel as often as may be necessary, carrying their loads to the summit of the mountain. The road, soon after reaching the base of the mountain, is overshadowed by trees, so that no extensive view is obtained until the Half-way House, with its ice-cold spring, is reached. From this point the ascent was formerly made on foot or horseback; but now a turnpike is constructed the remainder of the distance to the Summit House, and passengers are carried in stages or carriages to the very summit of the mountain.

The Summit House is fitted to receive about 100 guests, and is largely patronized during the summer months.

From Stowe, which is a charming summer residence, many interesting excursions may be made to neighboring celebrities, among which are Smugglers' Notch,—a deep, narrow, and exceedingly wild gorge near Mount Mansfield,—Bingham's Falls, Moss Glen Falls, and many other romantic and interesting places, all within a radius of ten miles from the Mansfield House.

Leaving Waterbury, we rush on, passing Ridley's Station, Bolton, Jonesville, and Richmond (which sends large quantities of butter to the Boston market).

Essex Junction. We reach this railway center at about five o'clock, and pause long enough to make the necessary connections with trains for Burlington and Rutland. The village is low, flat, sandy, and uninteresting, and has grown up since the railway connections with Burlington were made. We are now 238 miles from Boston, and 94 from Montreal.

ST. ALBANS, VT.

CENTRAL VERMONT

Leaving Essex, we run through Colchester, Milton, Georgia, and a little before six o'clock the car-door opens, and we are notified that we have reached

St. Albans, where fifteen minutes will be allowed for refreshments. This station boasts of the best restaurant on the line. If so, it must be indeed a good one, for we never fared better than at Nashua, where we obtained excellent coffee and wholesome food, neatly served. Mr. Dunton, however, has long held sway at St. Albans, and his numerous patrons wish that his shadow may never grow less. St. Albans is a very pleasant town, and one of the busiest in the State. It is built upon a gently sloping hill overlooking Lake Champlain, which is only two miles distant. The lower part of the town, in the vicinity of the railway station, is level; but the land soon rises, and the principal business street, with the pleasantest part of the town, is on the hillside. Situated in the midst of an unsurpassed grazing country, St. Albans is noted for its butter and cheese. Three hundred carloads of these two commodities are yearly shipped to the markets of Boston. Tuesday is the market-day, and at that time large amounts of money are paid to the farmers by agents from Boston provision merchants. It is said that $60,000 have been thus paid over in a single day. St. Albans Bay, on Lake Champlain, was, prior to the building of the railroad, the business centre of the town, but it is now of comparatively little importance.

The streets of the town are, for the most part, straight and well graded. The public square, containing four acres, is an ornamental ground, laid out with walks and planted with shade-trees. Around it are the principal buildings of the town, including three churches, the court-house, the high-school, and the Welden House. This hotel is a large, well-constructed building, and is fitted with every convenience to be found in any of our first-class houses. The heavy money transactions mentioned above have made the town the center of banking business for the surrounding region, and three prosperous banks are in active operation.

All who have visited St. Albans have heard of the magnificent view from Aldis Hill, an elevation near the town. It is, in truth, a very lovely prospect, commanding the ranges of the Adirondacks and a wide stretch of Lake Champlain. At the hour of sunset, on a calm evening, the beauty of the scene from this hill is well-nigh matchless. The general offices of the Central Vermont Railway are at St. Albans, and the arrangement of the station and offices adjoining are well worth inspection. The passenger-house is 300 feet long, and contains four tracks. An extensive wing—if it may be so called—adjoining the passenger-house contains the general offices. This building is most conveniently and elegantly arranged and furnished. It contains a reading-room, where all the leading periodicals and newspapers are kept for the use of officers and employees.

Off for Montreal. Soon after leaving St. Albans the scenery ceases to become notably beautiful, although it is not destitute of interest, and occasionally a pretty stretch of country repays the watchful traveler. Entering the Victoria Bridge, but little can be seen excepting iron plates and braces, until after the space of six or ten minutes the train emerges from the western end of the bridge, and, following a descending grade, soon reaches the level of the streets, and in a few minutes enters the Montreal Depot. The Victoria Bridge is nearly two miles long. It is built on the tubular plan, and rests on two abutments and twenty-four piers. It cost $6,300,000.

A DELIGHTFUL EXCURSION.

A delightful excursion may be made by going to Montreal over a longer and more delightful route. Instead of proceeding to St. Johns, and over the Victoria Bridge, we take the Ogdensburg & Lake Champlain Railway. Rouses Point is the eastern terminus of this railroad. The road derives its chief importance from its being the link that connects the traffic of the East and West, which passes over the long line of water communication between Chicago and Ogdensburg, and over the Central Railroad of Vermont. Ogdensburg, the western terminus, is, besides, an important point of departure by steamer for Montreal and Quebec, and all points on the lakes or the St. Lawrence, and also by Rome,

CENTRAL VERMONT R.R.

Watertown, and Ogdensburg Railroad for all points south. As we pass west from Rouse's Point, space permits mention of a few places only. Champlain, on the great Chazy River, has good water-power and navigation to Lake Champlain, to which it chiefly owes its prosperity. Mooer's Junction is where this railroad connects with the Montreal and Plattsburg Railroad. Chateaugay is an interesting place, from its extended views, its proximity to Chateaugay Lake, the source of the river of the same name, and that portion of the North Woods known as the Chateaugay Woods. There are also very interesting springs, falls, and picturesque scenery near, including the wonderful Chateaugay Chasm, which bids fair to outrival Watkins Glen and Ausable Chasm: it is located only two miles from the station and well repays a visit. Malone is the county town of Franklin County, on the Salmon River. It has beautiful streets and handsome public and private buildings. The Franklin Academy is here. The railroad depot is a large and handsome brick structure, and the hotel is fine and well kept. The Saranac Lakes and hunting-grounds are easily reached from Malone. Brasher Falls is the station nearest to Massena Springs, five miles distant, to which stages run from Dunton's Hotel twice daily, Sundays excepted, during the pleasure season. Massena Springs is a popular resort. The water is sulphurous in character, and possesses valuable medicinal properties. The village is neat, and in the season of pleasure-travel is gay and lively with guests. There are several springs, of which St. Regis is the chief. White's Hotel is a good house, and tourists and visitors at the springs will find much here to minister to their comfort and delight. At Norwood the Potsdam Branch of the Rome, Watertown, and Ogdensburg Railroad diverges for Rome and all points East, South, and West. Potsdam is four miles south of the Junction. Ogdensburg, on the St. Lawrence River, and at the mouth of the Oswegatchie River, is a town of about 12,000 inhabitants, a United States port of entry and delivery, and a town of great commercial importance. It is handsomely laid out on a hillside and plateau, just at the mouth of the Oswegatchie, whose waters drive the machinery of its factories and mills. Its custom-house and post-office, built of Ohio sandstone at a cost of $200,000, is a fine structure. The city has many fine private residences along the east bank of the Os-wegatchie. The main street is lined with well-built stores, banks, and public buildings. The business of the place is large. A steam ferry connects the city with Prescott, on the opposite shore of the River St. Lawrence and with the Grand Trunk Railroad and the Ottawa and Prescott Railroad of Canada. Steamers of the St. Lawrence Steamboat Company and Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, run up the St. Lawrence to the Thousand Islands, Clayton, and Toronto, and down the Rapids of the St. Lawrence to Montreal and Quebec, connecting with the Ogdensburg and Lake Champlain, and the Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg Railroads, and with trains of the Utica and Black River Railroad for Watertown, Lowville, Trenton Falls, Utica, etc.

CENTRAL VERMONT R.R.

HINTS TO TOURISTS.

To the angler, or the man or woman seeking after rest and retirement from the bustle, confusion, and fashion of the city, the Central Vermont Railway offers superior inducements. Excellent fishing, quiet, peaceful repose, delightful scenery, healthful food, bracing, stimulating air—in fact, every desideratum for a summer's vacation can be found along the line of the Central Vermont Railway, its leased lines, and its many connections. In respect to diversity and beauty of scenery, this road is unexcelled by any in this country. .

THE RUTLAND DIVISION of the Central Vermont line embraces the Rutland and the Addison Railroads. The Rutland Railroad proper, extending from Bellows Falls to Burlington, was finished in 1849. It passes through the only two cities in the State—Vergennes and Burlington. At Rutland it connects with the Delaware and Hudson Canal Railroad for Saratoga, and the Bennington and Rutland Railroads. It passes through the richest marble district in the State, and has done much toward developing this important industry.

Rutland was an important point during the "New York Controversy," and in 1774 three of her citizens were proclaimed outlaws by the Royal Governor, and a price set upon their heads. Rutland was one of the capitals of the State from 1784 to 1804, and the State House, erected in 1784, is still standing, and with one exception is the oldest public building in the State. The town in 1870 had a population of 9,834, 11 churches, 25 school-houses, 16 marble quarries, and 12 mills, employing 750 men.

At Leicester Junction the Addison division branches to the west, crossing Lake Champlain by a bridge near the ruins of Fort Ticonderoga. The village of Ticonderoga is two miles from the station.

The scenery along the entire length of the line is varied, picturesque, lovely. The road passes for twenty miles south of Burlington along the shore of, or in sight of, Lake Champlain, with the Adirondack Mountains in the background.

Lake Dunmore, one of the most delightful summer resorts in the State, is five miles long, one mile wide, and covers a territory of about 1,400 acres, at an altitude of 350 feet above the level of the sea. On the western shores the country rises in undulating meadows and wooded hills, while on the eastern side two or three spurs of the Green Mountains rise to a height of 1,500 or 2,000 feet. From these elevations on either side, which are accessible by pedestrians or on horseback, extended views of the surrounding country are obtainable. This region has been for many years a favorite resort for many Boston, New York, and Philadelphia families. To reach the lake, the tourist leaves the cars at Salisbury station, and rides five miles in a coach.

Among other Points of Interest passed in the journey north is the town of Middlebury, made famous by Middlebury College, erected in 1800. The standard of the College, which is in "Orthodox" hands, is very high. Vergennes is the oldest city in Vermont, and the smallest. It was incorporated a city in 1788, and is a little more than a mile square. It is situated on Otter Creek, at the head of navigation. Vessels of 300 tons can lie almost alongside the bank anywhere below the city. It was here that Commodore McDonough's fleet fitted out during the war of 1812, and a United States arsenal is located here. Passing along rapidly through

GATE OF THE WINOOSKI.

CENTRAL VERMONT R.R.

Ferrisburg, North Ferrisburg, Charlotte, Shelburne, and Queen City Park, we arrive at Burlington, the chief city of the State, 318 miles from New York, and 233 from Boston, and 82 from Montreal. It is delightfully situated on an eminence overlooking Lake Champlain, and was incorporated a city in 1806, and had a population, in 1880, of about 20,000. Lumber is the principal article of export. The University of Vermont and the Agricultural College are delightfully located on a lofty eminence. The city is well supplied with excellent public and private schools, the principal streets are four rods wide, and, all things considered, it is the most interesting city of its size in the country.

Lake Champlain. Few lakes in the country possess so many claims upon the attention of the great public as does "the Gate of the Country," as it has been poetically designated by the early tribes of Indians who lived on its shores. It is about 125 miles long, and varies from a few rods to 13 miles in width. From Whitehall, N. Y., to Ticonderoga, it is full of interest. The scenery is grand and peaceful, and to the disciple of old Izaak Walton, it probably possesses more attractions than any other lake in the country. Its waters fairly teem with black bass, pickerel, pike, perch, and other families of the finny tribe. The lake is also historically of great interest. It was the scene of several important battles during the war of 1812. The most important was the battle of Plattsburg, which was fought September 11, 1814. The British and American fleets were engaged in a fierce battle on the water, while on shore the armies of both nations were engaged in a fight which resulted disastrously to the British.

Leaving Burlington by rail, a short ride brings us to a tunnel, emerging from which the train shoots out upon the first of the two bridges which here spans the famous Winooski Gorge. The scenery is exceedingly wild and picturesque; the walls of the gorge are three hundred feet apart and about one hundred high, and are cut into many fantastic forms and shapes by the erosive action of the turbulent river.

The charming meadow and mountain views from the south side of the cars are worthy the pencil of any artist. At Essex Junction, connections are made with the Central division for all points north and south.

ST. LAWRENCE STEAMBOAT COMPANY.

ON and after Sunday, June 24th, a Steamboat Express train, with elegant Palace sleeping-cars attached, will leave Niagara Falls daily, except Saturday, at 7 o'clock p. m.

The train passes along the bank of the Niagara River to Lewiston, from which point the road follows the shore of Lake Ontario, and passes through Charlotte, Oswego, and Watertown, arriving at Clayton at 5.50 A. M., connecting there with steamers of this line, which leave at 6 A. M. Passengers from New York can leave at 9 P. M. via N. Y. C. & H. R. R. R., and Boston at 6 P. M. via B. & A. R. R., or Fitchburg R. R., and connect at Utica with the Utica & Black River R. R. express train reaching Clayton in the morning.

The train runs directly to the wharf of the steamer, which leaves at once, an elegant breakfast à la carte being served on board.

The early hours of the day take the voyagers among the enchanting scenery of the Thousand Islands—undoubtedly the most marvelous scenic region in America. Here the river becomes, in point of fact, a vast lake, dotted with innumerable islands, some of them being miles in extent, and others mere crags, projecting above the mirrored surface of the limpid waters.

A day express train service between Niagara Falls and Clayton, and between New York, Boston, and Clayton, will be operated during this season.

Leaving Alexandria Bay, the steamer calls at Ogdensburg, where connection is made to and from points on Lake Champlain, White Mountains, and all New England cities.

Soon after leaving Ogdensburg the current of the river perceptibly increases in rapidity. Every one is now on the qui vive, for we are approaching the first of the rapids, the Gallopes and Rapids du Plan, not so wild or exciting as those yet to be met, but a fitting foretaste of the wild grandeur of this portion of the river.

The next rapids encountered is the Long Sault; forty minutes are required to pass this descent. Then the steamer floats into the tranquil waters of the beautiful Lake St. Francis.

Cedar Rapids are safely passed and another lake discovered, that of St. Joseph, and the river flowing hence rushes in sudden haste down that most exciting and grandly beautiful of the series, the Lachine Rapids—soon after arriving at Montreal.

BOSTON'S CENTENNIAL OF PEACE.

THE GRAND FOREIGN EXHIBITION

WILL OPEN IN THE CITY OF BOSTON ON THE THIRD DAY OF SEPTEMBER, 1883,

In Commemoration of the Centennial Anniversary of the Signing of the Treaty of Peace by the Representatives of the Nations of the United States, Great Britain, France, and Spain.

For the first time in the history of the world, an exhibition will be held, devoted entirely to articles representing the Products, Arts, and Manufactures of countries other than that in which the Exhibition is held. This liberality, as shown in the World's Fair in Boston, has already been recognized to so large an extent by foreign nations, as to render it necessary to consider the erection of another building in which the surplus exhibits may be arranged. Special attention should be called to the Oriental section of the Exhibition, which will present a gorgeous array of Eastern wealth and magnificence, the Chinese and Japanese Courts vieing with each other in displays of Silks, Gold and Silver Filagree Work, Carved Ivory, Sandal Wood, Inlaid Bronzes; while from the East Indies magnificent specimens of Shawls, Bamboo and Straw Work, Arms and Armor, will attract the visitors' attention. From Europe an exhibit of Works of Art is already promised, which will, in every respect, be equal to any former exhibition. France will be represented by Ceramic Ware, Sevres Vases, Gobelin Tapestry, Baccarat Glass, Barbadienne Bronzes, etc., etc.; Italy, by its wonders of the sculptors art and fine Mosaics. From Switzerland, Music-Boxes, Watches, Satin Ribbons, Carved Wood, Cuckoo Clocks. England will be fully represented by a long list of manufactures, from Minton, Elkington, Doulton, and other well-known sources. Ireland has for the first time prominence as a nation, and a glance at the extent and variety of her manufactures will be a surprise to the visitors. The exhibits from Brazil will comprise the wonderful Insect Jewelry, Fans of Fish-Scales and Feather Flowers. Brussels will present her marvelous wealth of Lace; and Germany, Paintings from Dusseldorf, Toys from Nuremberg, Silks, Ribbons, Cloths, Worsted, etc.; while from Vienna we shall have the wonders in Leather and Iron Work already so famous.
